Journal of the Common Economy and the Common Good (Z'GuG)

Special Issue 4/2026
"Scientific Impulses for Health and Social Responsibility"

The interplay between social welfare, health, and social responsibility is the subject of intense discussion and research in society and academia. This special issue of the Journal of Social Economy and Social Welfare - Z'GuG - invites contributions that explore innovative perspectives and interdisciplinary approaches to promoting health and social responsibility. The focus is on theoretical and practice-oriented work examining the significance of health-promoting structures, improved healthcare systems, optimized resource allocation, social justice, and sustainable community models.

We welcome articles offering solid quantitative and qualitative analyses, critical reflections, or best practice examples from science and practice. Contributions that foster cooperation between sectors, participatory models, and innovative solutions are encouraged. A key requirement for all submissions is their relevance to and embedding within the concept of social welfare.
